Hi team. Thanks for the opportunity to provide feedback.

I am concerned the Act has very little substance in that it can be overturned at any time it suits any government's agenda as was recently demonstrated when the government approved a rocket launching facility near Port Lincoln. This is in an area where a Heritage agreement has been in place for 50 years. This same area was a known habitat for rare and endangered species as was the waters surrounding the heritage agreement location. The proposed facility was given the go ahead despite considerable opposition by the local community who were adamant that the habitat and the rare and endangered species remained protected and that tourism opportunities remain for the long term. A sad indictment of the governments long term concerns for biodiversity protection and management.

Therefore it seems that any Act such as this can be rescinded at any time it financially suits governments of the days agendas thus over riding the principles of biodiversity protection.

Cheers
