To whom it may concern

As you know, the most significant threat to bio diversity in South Australia are feral and domestic cats.

The laws in SA that prevent trapping a cat within a 1km radius of a house needs to be overhauled. If we are serious about protecting our wildlife, tough new laws preventing cats roaming at night, the ability to catch them in and around the suburbs, as well as bushland and the confining of cats during the day to their residence must be law and enforced with fines.

Volunteer groups interstate humanely trap and identify problem areas. This should be encouraged here, and the ability to trap a cat be freely available and encouraged. Vets should also have an incentive scheme to accept cats and either euthanise feral cats or pass on registered cats to authorities for enforcement.

THIS ALONE, will save more wildlife than any other measure under the bio diversity plan.

Please, please make some State laws to protect our native wildlife, they have enough to contend with, without dealing with roaming cats.

Kind regards
